SINGLE OR MARRIED, LEARN TO LOVE (3)

Philippians 2:3-4

■ Pastor Sam Adeyemi

We previously established that people perceive love differently. Generally, if we'll be successful in our relationships and particularly in our marriages, we'll have to be sensitive to this. With reference to Gary Chapman's book; the 'Five Love Languages' we established that some perceive love by meaningful physical touch, others by words of affirmation, quality time, acts of service and giving of gifts. It is important that when we come into relationships we should try finding out what our partner's love language is because sometimes, it is very frustrating when you try expressing love to others in your own way and they are not impressed. That can be really hurtful. These love languages as we established previously are equally applicable to God and it is out of our overflow of love for God that such love reaches out to man as well. Love can be sensed and perceived, it is recognizable; 1 John 3:16.

If you are married and are not aware of your spouse's love language, it is time to ask. The big question to ask is, "How do you want me to love you?" Our default mode for expressing love is our own love language. For instance, the person whose love language is acts of service is always trying to do things for you and one whose love language is quality time is always trying to hold your attention in a conversation. Sadly, this is where most of the problems stem from because both partners are speaking different love languages and they aren't understanding each other. In this process, our love tanks are not filled. Hence, it is important to know how our spouses want to be loved.

Sometimes the way a man wants love expressed to him is different from the way a woman wants love expressed to her. Gender difference often play out; a man will operate in the default mode of a man's way of thinking and similarly a woman. However, it is important to check what it is that makes an impact on the other person. Generally, men score acts of love differently from women; for men, the more powerful the act, the bigger the point you score. For a woman, every act is weighted averagely same whether they are big or small. Hence, frequency of the acts of love, whether big or small is more important for the female. Communication is the food of love and people communicate in different ways.

Temperaments also play a part in the way people recognize and appreciate love. If you are married to an introvert or extrovert, you have to be sensitive to them. If you are being upset by your spouse's personality to the point of acting negatively, then be aware that you are missing it big. You're getting to hit at the core of the other person's being because no one created themselves. Complaining that the other talks too much for instance; you are hitting the core of the person's being. You should bear in mind that the person didn't create himself/herself.

BARRENNESS BROKEN

For over seven years we had been married, we believed God for the fruit of womb. My wife encouraged that we come regularly to the mid-week service. We made this our single prayer point. Early 2017, she informed me for the first time in our marriage that she was pregnant. A few days later she told me she got another test report that showed it was negative. We came to mid-week service that day and had a prayer of agreement over the report and rejected it. On our way home from the same service, my wife got a call from the laboratory apologizing about the report she was given and that there was a mix up in the second pregnancy test. What they reported as a negative pregnancy test is now a strong baby boy today running all around our home. We thank God because He is faithful. -S. A
